NOTE FROM THE EDITOR

Spring has sprung, and the pollen has exploded! New life is all around us! Does your busy schedule have you feeling a little stressed and overwhelmed? Check out our feature article with 10 things to stop worrying about. We like to focus on family health each April and stress is not healthy for any of us, especially parents. We also have some fun ways to celebrate Earth Day and tips for how to step away from the TV and enjoy the life around us a little more.

Was your baby born in the Spring? Our Annual Birthday Party Guide will help you plan a celebration. And, with only two months left before summer, our handy dandy Summer Camp Guide is just what you need to finalize your kids' camp plans. Don't wait til the last minute!!

Wishing you a wonderful Spring! Get outside and enjoy the beautiful weather as much as your allergies will allow!

SPRING into Action!

14 WAYS TO CELEBRATE EARTH DAY!

By Heather Lee Leap

Spring is here and Earth Day is close at hand, but don't wait until April 22nd to celebrate. Now is the time to reflect on your family's commitment to the environment. What can you do to educate and inspire your own children? Have fun as a family and encourage your children to be stewards of the Earth by jumping into action with these ideas.

Create an Earth Day Recycled Village. Delve into the recycling bin for small boxes and cardboard cylinders. Using a stiff piece of cardboard as a base let your child design a fantasy village of recycled materials. Glue objects together to create towers, arches and skyscrapers. When the village is dry, bring out poster paint and brushes to fuel another burst of creativity. Snap a photo, and when your child has moved on to other things, pitch it all back into the recycle bin.

Expand your palate. Visit a local market with your children and seek out unfamiliar produce. Choose a new fruit or vegetable to try each week.

Use alternative transportation. Use public transportation, walk or bike to reach a destination you would normally drive to.

Decorate re-usable canvas tote bags. Your kids can personalize their own bags using fabric markers and fabric paint. Use them all year long for shopping, library books and sleepovers, or pass them on as one-of-a-kind gifts.

Volunteer for a neighborhood clean-up project.

Visit a zoo or aquarium. Discuss how zoos have changed over time with an ever-increasing emphasis on scientific research and species conservation.

Plan, prepare and plant your garden. Set aside a portion of the garden for your children. Create a special patch they can tend and let them choose what to plant.

Make Earth Cookies. Bake sugar cookies and decorate them with blue and green icing to represent Earth's continents and oceans. Look at a globe or map for inspiration before you begin.

Use only eco-friendly and reusable products all day. Help your children notice things they can reuse. Don't forget those cloth napkins.

Turn out the lights and have dinner by candle light.

Clear the clutter. Search your home for items you no longer use and have your children do the same. Finding a new home for these things keeps them out of the landfill. It saves the manufacturing, transportation and packaging costs required when buying new. Get unused items back into circulation by donating them to charity or holding a yard sale. Sell items on a site such as Craigslist or leave them by the curb with a "free" sign for a few days.

Visit a park or nature preserve and go for a hike.

Make a biodegradable bird feeder by tying a long loop of yarn around a pine cone. Coat the pine cone with peanut butter or lard, and then roll it in seeds, nuts or oats. Hang this from a tree and watch as the birds swoop by for a taste.

Plant a tree. Arbor Day is officially the last Friday of April, the same week as Earth Day. Celebrate both days by joining a group tree-planting or by planting a tree on your own property.

As the saying goes, "Every day is Earth Day." So begin your family's stewardship adventure to today.

Let it Go!

10 THINGS TO STOP WORRYING ABOUT

by Lara Krupicka

Parenting: the toughest job you never trained for. The pressure we put on ourselves to get it right, whatever that means, can leave us bumping up against anxiety at every turn. But allowing our worries to intrude on our parenting can backfire. Researchers at the University of Arizona found kids of overinvolved parents had poorer coping skills and a greater sense of entitlement.

The good news? We're better parents when we worry less and let go more. Here are ten things you can drop from your list of worries:

YOU'LL FORGET - A PROMISE, A BIRTHDAY, A PLAYDATE.

Any time we fail to remember something our kids are counting on us for can be an occasion for guilt. But it happens. When you do forget, do your best to make it up to your child without going overboard. And ask them to help you come up with a new strategy for remembering. Then follow it.

YOU DON'T SPEND ENOUGH TIME WITH YOUR CHILD (or you don't spend enough one-on-one time).

Most parents think this from time to time, unless they're home with their kids 24/7. When that guilt springs up, it may be signaling a need for change in your schedule. Pull out the calendar and plan a special date with your child. Or look for new ways to maximize the time you do have.

YOU'LL MISS YOUR CHILD'S GAME/RECITAL/CONFERENCE/ PERFORMANCE.

Unless this is a habitual occurrence, join the ranks of parents everywhere in your distress. It's difficult to be multiple places at one time and chances are you're going to miss an event. But if you're present for your child in the everyday moments, pat yourself on the back. You're doing well. And if you know you'll miss the special time beforehand, have someone record it. Replay it later with your child.

YOU SOMETIMES WANT TO DO YOUR OWN THING, MINUS KIDS.

This doesn't mean you are a bad parent. Rather, it is a reminder that you are a human being with your own interests and needs. Taking time away from the kids isn't a sign that you don't love them. It's a sign that you love them enough to want to be your best self when you're with them by refueling in ways most suited to you. Occasionally those ways don't include the kids.

YOUR CHILD DOES NOT HAVE THE LATEST, GREATEST [FILL-IN-THE-BLANK].

It is easy to feel deficient as a parent when you can't (or won't) give your kids all they ask for. But consider what you do provide for your child - food, clothing, security, love. Banish the guilt by working together as a family to regularly recount all you can be grateful for.

YOUR CHILD WON'T THRIVE - AT SCHOOL, IN FRIENDSHIPS, IN EXTRACURRICULAR ACTIVITIES.

Each of us meets our match in one arena of life or another. Kids are no different. Remember any challenge that comes your child's way provides an opportunity for growth. Do your best to support them. If necessary provide extra time and resources for a season. Then demonstrate your confidence by encouraging your child to navigate on their own or with assigned helpers using the skills they have been taught.

YOUR CHILD'S DIET.

Is your child growing? Is he healthy? Does he have enough energy? Then you're probably feeding him well enough. If you're truly concerned, track your family's diet. Search out healthier alternatives and gradually introduce changes. We could all use a tweaking of our food habits on occasion.

THE UNTHINKABLE WILL HAPPEN.

It's hard not to see headlines about the latest tragedy and not fear for your own family. But those worries don't serve anyone. Remind yourself to control what you can: provide a safe environment for your family and educate your child on how to stay safe in a variety of settings. Let go of the rest.

THAT MISTAKE YOU MADE WILL SCAR THEM FOR LIFE.

You forgot to send treats on their birthday. You didn't know the school gym uniform was mandatory. We all goof from time to time. And sure, your child may not forget. Instead it could end up being the source of laughs for years to come. A "remember the time" moment.

YOU'RE NOT DOING A GOOD ENOUGH JOB AS A PARENT.

The fact that you worry this at all is a strong indicator you're an invested parent. You are giving it your best. Trust that in spite of any failings, your child knows you are trying. Your love and concern counts for a whole lot more than you realize.

FEVER?

When to Call the Doctor

As a parent, it's very upsetting when our little ones don't feel good. When they have a fever, it can be very worrisome as well. Although uncomfortable, fever isn't always a bad thing, it's often the body's way of fighting infections. According to The American Academy of Pediatrics, here are a few tips on when to call the doctor.

RIGHT AWAY...

- If they look very ill, unusually drowsy, or is very fussy
- Has been in a very hot place, such as an overheated car
- Has other symptoms, such as a stiff neck, severe headache, sore throat, ear pain, an unexplained rash, or repeated vomiting or diarrhea
- Has immune system problems, such as sickle cell disease or cancer, or is taking steroids
- Has had a seizure
- Is younger than 3 months and has a temperature of 100.4 degrees F or higher
- Fever rises about 104 degrees F for a child of any age

ALSO CALL IF...

- Your child still "acts sick" once his fever is brought down
- Your child seems to be getting worse
- The fever persists for more than 24 hours in a child younger than 2 years
- The fever persists for more than 3 days in a child 2 years or older

This article should not replace your pediatrician's advice, or your parenting intuition.
